5. IMAGINATION — The Ballet of the Enchanted Fountain

ACT ONE The curtain rises on a scene depicting a village square at the centre of which is a lovely old fountain. Three little girls enter, followed by their watchful governess. The exuberant children playfully dance, finally urging their governess to join them.

Presently, Alice, a lovely village maiden appears and seemingly fascinated, with the fountain, dances around it. Entranced with her lovely dancing, the children eagerly pursue her, expressing their curiosity as to why she is directing her attentions to the fountain. Alice tells them that according to an old legend, this fountain is really enchanted and at a certain time when the moonbeams dance at midnight, the Spirit of the Fountain and her attendant nymphs will appear to all that believe in her. Realizing that the children have faith in this belief, the village girl tells them that this is the very night when the Spirits will materialize, and urges the children to return.

As they are reluctantly taken home by their governess, the little girls promise each other to return to the fountain that night.

ACT TWO It is almost midnight and the square is deserted except for the village girl Alice. The three little girls return where they find Alice and wait hopefully. Soon the moonbeams appear, spurred on by the pleas of the children. Alice dances to entice the hidden Spirits to release themselves. When Alice falls exhausted by her exciting dance, two lovely water lilies emerge and join in the joyful dance. Suddenly the Spirit of the Fountain emerges, and dancing majestically she calls to her water nymphs and their Queen, who rises out of the fountain. Finally the moonbeams fade away and the Spirits know their period of freedom is ended. They return to their fountain leaving Alice and the children gazing rapturously, knowing that again on some moonlight night the Spirits will appear to those who believe in them.
